Thompson and Neumann closing on even Feingold in WI-Sen.

Raleigh, N.C. – Yesterday's release showed Tommy Thompson as potentially very vulnerable to a challenge from his right by Mark Neumann for the Republican Senate nomination in Wisconsin. But despite Thompson's electability claims, even Neumann is in decent shape against any possible Democratic nominee but Russ Feingold, as the race has taken a definite turn toward the GOP since PPP last polled the state in May.

Now Neumann tops Ron Kind, 43-40; Tammy Baldwin, 44-40; and Steve Kagen, 45-38, while trailing Feingold, 51-44. Three months ago, Neumann lagged Kagen by one point, Kind by four, Baldwin by five, and Feingold by 12, a shift of five to nine points on the margin.

Thompson is still the stronger candidate, but he only outperforms Neumann by one to six points—not so much, particularly when taking into consideration the 34-point disparity between the two men's name recognition. Thompson lags Feingold only 48-47, a closure of nine points in three months. But he leads Kind, 48-41 (up seven); Baldwin, 50-42 (up seven); and Kagen, 49-41 (up five).

Feingold is still the best-known and best-liked of the candidates, 49% having a favorable impression of him and 43% a negative one. That bests Thompson's 44-42, Baldwin's 26-28, Neumann's 25-27, Kind's 18-26, and Kagen's 12-23. Because of the Democrats' anonymity, more Democrats than Republicans are undecided except in the Feingold matchups, so the races will likely close. But the Republicans lead with independents except against Feingold, and all of the Democrats are losing more of their own party than they are gaining GOP support.

"Republicans have a genuine pick up opportunity here," said Dean Debnam, President of Public Policy Polling. "As the recall elections showed this is a very closely divided state right now."

PPP surveyed 830 Wisconsin voters from August 12th to 14th. The margin of error for the survey is +/- 3.4%. This poll was not paid for or authorized by any campaign or political organization. PPP surveys are conducted through automated telephone interviews. PPP is a Democratic polling company, but polling expert Nate Silver of the New York Times found that its surveys in 2010 actually exhibited a slight bias toward Republican candidates.
