Nunn in close race for Chambliss’ open Senate seat

Raleigh, N.C.- PPP’s first look at the Georgia Senate race since Michelle Nunn jumped in shows a potentially competitive general and primary. Nunn is tied with or leads all of her potential opponents, but a lot of voters are undecided, and they lean Republican. Phil Gingrey could be her stiffest competition, and also leads a stocked primary field.

Nunn has only $40-42 \%$ of the vote. She ties Gingrey at $41 \%$ and David Perdue at $40 \%$, leads Karen Handel and Jack Kingston each 40-38, Paul Broun 41-36, Derrick Grayson 42-36, and Eugene Yu 42-35. None of these candidates is known to more than $52 \%$ of voters, so between $18 \%$ and $24 \%$ of voters are undecided 15 months out.

In the four closest matchups, the undecideds report voting for Mitt Romney over President Obama by an average of 23 points, versus the +7 reported by the overall electorate. But racially, age-wise, and gender-wise, these voters mostly reflect the overall population; they like Nunn's father, former Sen. Sam Nunn, by an average of 30 points; and they favor Hillary Clinton over four possible opponents by an average of about half a point. They are more Republican than the overall electorate, and that could tip the eventual GOP nominee over the edge. But a lot of factors could complicate that, not least of which is the primary itself.

In that race, Gingrey is currently on top with $25 \%$, but $20 \%$ are undecided, and arguably the most controversial and least electable candidate, Broun, is in second with $19 \%$, ahead of Kingston's $15 \%$ and Handel's $13 \%$. The others are in single digits.
"The Georgia Senate race starts out as a toss up," said Dean Debnam, President of Public Policy Polling. "None of the Republican candidates are particularly well known or well liked to begin the race. Meanwhile the Nunn name still carries a lot of weight with voters in the state."

PPP surveyed 520 Georgia voters, including an oversample of 260 usual Republican primary voters, between August $2^{\text {nd }}$ and $5^{\text {th }}$. The margin of error for the overall survey is $+/-4.3 \%$, and $+/$ $6.1 \%$ for the GOP portion. This poll was not authorized or paid for by any campaign or political organization. PPP's surveys are conducted through automated telephone interviews.
