Perry leads Obama by only one point in Texas

Raleigh, N.C. - Rick Perry's standing in the state he has served as governor for about 12 years has declined along with that in the country at large. His $42 \%$ approval rating at home is actually lower than President Obama's 44\% approval in Texas. The president's standing on that front is up four points since PPP last polled the state in September, with Perry's down three. As such, Perry only leads the president by one point (48-47), versus a seven-point (51-44) lead four months ago.

The only candidate Obama beats in the Lone Star State is Newt Gingrich, who trails by two points (45-47). Obama trails his most likely opponent, Mitt Romney, by seven points (42-49); Rick Santorum by the exact same margin; and one of the state's congressmen, Ron Paul, by six (40-46).

But while Texas would probably be one of only a handful of states Paul would win as the GOP nominee against Obama, if he were a third-party candidate, he would make his adopted state very competitive between Obama and Romney. Paul would pull $17 \%$ as an independent, with Romney edging Obama only 40-38. That is because Paul does not hurt Obama at all with Democrats; he wins $81 \%$ of their vote either way, with Paul at $6 \%$. But Paul pulls Romney from $84 \%$ to $73 \%$ of Republicans, and he actually wins independents with 32\%, pulling about equally from Obama (down from 43\% to 30\%) and Romney (41\% to 27\%).

By contrast, a more likely third-party candidate, Libertarian Gary Johnson from neighboring New Mexico, would actually help Romney a bit in this state. Romney would lead Obama by eight points (47-39), with Johnson at 7\%, the same proportion he gets in PPP's latest national poll.
"Rick Perry's campaign clearly hurt his standing in Texas," said Dean Debnam, President of Public Policy Polling. "He’d have trouble even beating Obama there at this point."

PPP surveyed 700 Texas voters from January $12^{\text {th }}$ to $15^{\text {th }}$. The margin of error for the survey is $+/-3.7 \%$. This poll was not paid for or authorized by any campaign or political organization. PPP surveys are conducted through automated telephone interviews. PPP is a Democratic polling company, but polling expert Nate Silver of the New York Times found that its surveys in 2010 actually exhibited a slight bias toward Republican candidates.
