McCain Less Popular than Obama in Arizona

Raleigh, N.C. – John McCain might still beat Barack Obama handily were there a redo of the 2008 election in McCain’s home state, but the senator’s constituents now view Obama’s job performance more favorably than they do that of their longtime senator. 45% of Arizona voters like the job Obama is doing, to 51% who disapprove. While that may seem bad, only 34% approve of how McCain is handling his job to 55% who do not. Republicans only barely approve, 48-39, with independents down at 28-58.

Worse for McCain, his abandonment of the traditional “maverick” label of which he was once proud now has him viewed by 55% as being “a partisan voice for national Republicans,” versus the 28% who see him as “an independent voice for Arizona.” A 35% plurality view him as too conservative; that mark is 45% with moderates.

Being pressed from the right by former Congressman J.D. Hayworth, particularly on immigration, McCain has sided with the new state law cracking down on illegal aliens. This new stance, at odds with his past push for bipartisan immigration reform, has yet to register with voters, a 39% plurality of whom view him as too lenient on immigration. 54% of his party holds that view.

McCain is lucky that his opponents in the Senate race are no more popular than he is. Hayworth is viewed positively by only 23% of voters, with 50% expressing an unfavorable view of him. Democrat Rodney Glassman, a relatively new Tuscon City Councilman, is unknown to 78% of voters; those who have an opinion are negative, 7-15.

McCain leads Glassman 49-33 in a test matchup, but Glassman tops Hayworth 42-39.

“McCain is stuck between a rock and a hard place,” said Dean Debnam, President of Public Policy Polling. “On the one hand, he is seen as soft on immigration. On the other, he is seen as too partisan and too conservative.”

PPP surveyed 813 Arizona voters from April 23rd to 25th. The margin of error for the survey is +/-3.4%. Other factors, such as refusal to be interviewed and weighting, may introduce additional error that is more difficult to quantify.
