Hickenlooper Loses Ground to McInnis

Raleigh, N.C. – The race for Colorado governor between Denver Mayor John Hickenlooper, the Democrat, and Republican Scott McInnis is now tied at 44% apiece after Hickenlooper led by double digits, 50-39, in March.

Hickenlooper now draws only 78% of his party's vote, similar to the 79% of the GOP which McInnis earns, but down from the 85% he got in March. He also only gets 9% of the Republican vote, down from 13% in March and now less than McInnis' 11% of the Democratic vote.

Most crucially, Hickenlooper has seen a 48-34 lead with independents evaporate to a 42-46 deficit, and a 54-37 lead with what is by far the largest age group, those 46 to 65, drop to 46-43. Hickenlooper also led with the 79% of the electorate that is white 47-42, but is now down 42-45. His lead among Hispanics has decreased slightly, from 59-32 to 57-37.

Hickenlooper still enjoys a much more positive favorability rating than most candidates and elected officials in this political climate, at 47-33, but that is a decline from 51-27 just two months ago. The entire drop has come among Republicans (30-41 to 21-57) and independents (49-28 to 44-34).

McInnis is less popular but also less known; his narrow positive margin is the same as in March—28-27 then and 31-30 now.

“John Hickenlooper has an unusual level of personal popularity with independents and Republicans for a Democrat,” said Dean Debnam, President of Public Policy Polling. “But it’s not translating into a willingness by them to vote for him. Between this race and the Senate contest Colorado will be one of the most hard fought states in the country this year.”

PPP surveyed 1,060 Colorado voters from May 14th to 16th. The margin of error for the survey is +/-3.0%. Other factors, such as refusal to be interviewed and weighting, may introduce additional error that is more difficult to quantify.
