Berkley gaining on Heller, trails narrowly

Raleigh, N.C. – In PPP’s first look at the Nevada Senate race since Shelley Berkley and Dean Heller became official candidates for John Ensign’s seat, Berkley has more than halved the gap between her and her House colleague since January. She trails only 47-43 after lagging by a 51-38 margin in a PPP poll three months ago.

Heller is very popular with independents. 51% of them see him favorably, and only 21% unfavorably. But he has gotten a lot less popular with Democrats since January, going from an unusually close 22-31 favorable-unfavorable margin to only 16-48 now. That is still healthy crossover support, especially combined with unanimity among Republicans and such strong support from unaffiliated voters. But as Berkley has entered the scene, the trajectory is not in his favor to maintain that support.

In the previous poll, Heller took a full 20% of Berkley’s party’s vote, but now earns only 13%. Keeping him in the lead are independents, who support him by an almost identical 56-29 spread, and Republicans, who have lined up a little more steadily behind him, 86-8 versus 85-12. Because of a healthy number of Democrats crossing over to Heller and almost twice as many Democrats being undecided as Republicans, Berkley maintains only 76% of her party’s backing, an imbalance that gives Berkley room to grow as she becomes better known over the course of her candidacy.

Right now, voters are split pretty evenly on how they feel about Berkley personally, 34% with a favorable opinion, 31% unfavorable, and a 35% plurality not sure. Only 28% have no opinion of the former statewide officeholder Heller. Berkley has become only slightly less popular in the last three months; previously, she had a 34-29 grade.

“Shelley Berkley’s come out of the gate a lot stronger than Dean Heller since John Ensign officially announced he wasn’t going to run again,” said Dean Debnam, President of Public Policy Polling. “It should be a very competitive race.”

PPP surveyed 491 Nevada voters from April 21st to 24th. The margin of error for the survey is +/-4.4%. This poll was not paid for or authorized by any campaign or political organization. PPP surveys are conducted through automated telephone interviews. PPP is a Democratic polling company but polling expert Nate Silver of the New York Times found that its surveys in 2010 actually exhibited a slight bias toward Republican candidates.
