Obama boosts leads over Republicans nationally

Raleigh, N.C. – Despite his approval rating falling back to even (47% both approving and disapproving, down slightly from 49-46 last month), President Obama has put a little more distance between himself and three of his potential Republican opponents in the race for the national popular vote since PPP's February poll. He now leads the four usual frontrunners by five to 15 points and two little-known dark horses also by double digits.

Both Mike Huckabee (48-43) and Mitt Romney (47-42) trail the president by five points. That is an identical margin as last month's results for Romney, but Huckabee was then down by only three. Trailing by nine last month, Newt Gingrich is now behind 11 (50-39). And, as ever, bringing up the rear among the usual suspects, Sarah Palin has increased her deficit back to 15 points (53-38) after lagging by 12 in February. PPP also tested likely contender Tim Pawlenty, who trails by 14 (47-33), and possible GOP primary entrant Herman Cain, who loses by 18 (47-29).

It is no surprise neither Cain nor Pawlenty fare well. Only 48% are aware of Pawlenty, and 38% of Cain. Of those who do have an opinion of Pawlenty, 15% are favorable and 33% unfavorable, about par for the course with the other candidates, all of whom are known entities to at least three-quarters of American voters but are, as ever, in negative territory. Huckabee is best off, at a net -7 favorability rating, followed by Romney's -12, Pawlenty's -18, Cain's -20 (9-29), Palin's -22, and Gingrich's -31.

The president has improved since last month with independents, leading the Republicans by eight (against Romney) to 28 points (versus Palin). Palin does worse than the far less-known Cain and Pawlenty do with these unaffiliated voters. Though he continues to lose double-digit percentages of his own party to the leading Republicans, Obama also takes 9-13% of Republicans. The Republicans' only saving grace is that far more Republicans and independents remain undecided than Democrats, who the president has locked up.

"Obama's numbers continue to tell the same story," said Dean Debnam, President of Public Policy Polling. "Voters aren't all that enamored with him right now but when they look at him and then they look at the Republican alternatives he comes out looking pretty good."

PPP surveyed 642 American voters from March 10th to 13th. The survey's margin of error is +/-3.9%. Other factors, such as refusal to be interviewed and weighting, may introduce additional error that is more difficult to quantify.
