Obama leads in Conn. but only by eight

Raleigh, N.C. – President Obama has quite possibly dropped more in Connecticut than in any other state he won in 2008. He beat John McCain in the Nutmeg State by over 22 points, and now leads Mitt Romney by only eight among likely voters in this fall’s election. But there is almost no chance that margin closes much if any further in this still pretty strongly Democratic state.

Obama has 51% to Romney’s 43%. That is down from the 61-38 victory he scored over McCain, but up from his only two-point edge (47-45) the last time PPP polled the state in September 2011. That is because of three things: Obama is up from 79% to 83% of his own party, which makes up over 40% of the electorate; he is now poaching 15% of Romney’s partisans, up from 9% last fall; and Romney is down from a 12-point lead (48-36) with the state’s sizeable chunk of independents to only a seven-point edge (47-40).

This shift from being a shocking toss-up to only a surprising lean-Obama state also mirrors the diverging paths in the two candidates’ personal numbers. Last fall was a relative low point for Obama’s approval figures, and Romney had yet to actually go before primary voters. Connecticut voters then almost broke even on him, with 41% seeing him favorably and 42% unfavorably in the state next door to the one he governed. That is now 41-53. Meanwhile, Obama is now in the positive approval-wise, up from 48-49 to 50-46.

Unlike in some other states where PPP has recently tested the four most commonly mentioned potential running mates for Romney, there is no slam-dunk prospective VP here. Condi Rice would close the gap by three points to 48-43, but Bobby Jindal (51-41) and Tim Pawlenty (49-39) would each actually up Obama’s advantage by two points, and Rob Portman would by three (51-40). Rice makes six points of difference for Romney in both Pennsylvania and Michigan, and two points in Florida, turning a close Obama lead into a close Romney one in Florida and an Obama lead to a tie in Pennsylvania.

“Obama doesn’t actually have to worry about losing Connecticut,” said Dean Debnam, President of Public Policy Polling. “But his single digit lead there certainly shows he’s not as strong as he was in 2008.”

PPP surveyed 771 likely Connecticut voters from July 26th to 29th. The margin of error for the survey is +/-3.5%. This poll was not paid for or authorized by any campaign or political organization. PPP surveys are conducted through automated telephone interviews.
