Most Voters Undecided in Florida Senate Primaries

Raleigh, N.C. – PPP's new Florida Senate poll finds that the race is pretty much undefined, with the candidates largely unknown and 'undecided' leading the primaries on both the Democratic and Republican sides.

On the GOP side none of the 3 major hopefuls who have declared their candidacies so far have even 40% name recognition. David Jolly and Ron DeSantis each have 37% name recognition, and for Carlos Lopez-Cantera it's even lower at 31%. 52% of voters say they're undecided about who they'd want their candidate to be given those choices, with Jolly at 18%, DeSantis at 15%, and Lopez-Cantera at 14%. It's going to be a while before this race really develops and there's definitely still room in the field for others to join.

It's a similar story on the Democratic side- a 39% plurality of voters are undecided, with Alan Grayson getting 33% to Patrick Murphy's 27%, thanks largely to a 44/21 advantage with voters who describe themselves as 'very liberal.' The Democratic hopefuls are better known than the Republicans, but Murphy still has only 48% name recognition and despite his high national profile even Grayson is only familiar to 55% of primary voters.

The general elections match ups lean slightly Democratic at this point, with Murphy generally faring better in them than Grayson. Murphy leads all the Republicans- it's 40/35 over both DeSantis and Jolly, and 41/35 over Lopez-Cantera. Grayson slightly trails both Jolly (39/36) and DeSantis (37/36), but does lead Lopez-Cantera 41/34.

One thing that could put a wrench in the whole Senate race is if Rubio makes a late pivot to run for reelection as his Presidential campaign struggles. He would start out with pretty decent sized leads over both Murphy (46/40) and Grayson (48/38) if he ended up making that change in plans.

"The main story line in the Florida Senate race right now is how unknown the candidates are," said Dean Debnam, President of Public Policy Polling. "It's going to take a while for this contest to really develop."
