N.C. GOP legislators' popularity in the toilet

Raleigh, N.C. – There is no question North Carolina's Republican-led legislature hurt itself in the court of public opinion when it went into session after midnight last week. 65% of the state's voters think holding votes then is inappropriate, and only 19% find it appropriate—feelings shared by voters of all partisan stripes. Because of that, the legislature's own approval rating is down to 16%, with 54% disapproving. Democrats fall at 13-55, independents even worse at 14-60, and the GOP's own base at only 22-50.

And voters seem to know that the Republican leadership in the General Assembly is responsible for their displeasure. Republican legislators' approval rating has slid from 29% when PPP last surveyed the state a month ago, to 27% now, with 47% disapproving (48% in December). The minority Democrats are not popular either, but their approval spread is stuck at 36-41, 15 points better than the Republicans'.

Touching on some hot buttons, particularly in Southern politics, 92% of Tar Heels say they would be open to voting for a black candidate for public office. 4% say they would not consider it, and 4% are not sure. 53% would be open to a gay candidate, but 36% would not. 45% of voters, however, would not vote for a Muslim candidate, while 40% would. On all three questions, independents are the most open (95% for blacks, 67% for gays, and 52% for Muslims), better than Democrats (94%/58%/48%) or Republicans (88%/37%/19%).

Opinion has moved a hair against the marriage amendment as the date of the vote draws a month closer. Last month, 58% of usual primary voters said they would vote for it, and 32% against it. That is now 56/34. The outcome remains not only a matter of turnout but of education. 57% of these same primary voters are in favor of civil unions for gay couples, which the amendment would ban. That includes 64% of Democrats (who are now split 46-44 for the amendment) and 61% of independents (52/36). But it also includes 43% of Republicans, who overwhelmingly pledge for the amendment (74-17).

PPP surveyed 780 North Carolina voters from January 5th to 8th. The margin of error for the survey is +/-3.5%. This poll was not paid for or authorized by any campaign or political organization. PPP surveys are conducted through automated telephone interviews. PPP is a Democratic polling company, but polling expert Nate Silver of the New York Times found that its surveys in 2010 actually exhibited a slight bias toward Republican candidates.
