Corbett a massive underdog for a second term

Raleigh, N.C. – Tom Corbett is in bigger trouble than ever, leading all the Democrats PPP tested against him—when he led them all just two months ago. The first-term Pennsylvania governor is down 11 points (34-45) against U.S. Rep. Allyson Schwartz, and by an identical margin against former Rep. Joe Sestak and state Treasurer Rob McCord. Corbett also lags behind businessman Tom Wolf by nine (33-42), and John Hanger by seven (34-41). When PPP last polled the state in January, Corbett led Hanger by four points, Sestak and McCord by six, Schwartz by seven, and Wolf by 12.

Corbett's deficits are even more remarkable when one considers that these prospective opponents are unknown to the vast majority of voters. When asked whether they have a favorable or unfavorable opinion of them, only 52% can say how they feel about Sestak, 38% about Schwartz, 31% about Hanger, 30% about McCord, and 22% about Wolf. To boot, the large group of undecided voters in these match-ups is strongly Democratic, and they disapprove of Corbett even more than the overall electorate does, so this could actually represent closer to the governor's ceiling than his floor.

Only a third of Keystone Staters approve of Corbett's job performance, with almost three in five disapproving. It was 38-52 when PPP last polled the state in January. Unlike a lot of public figures who are able to rebound from low approval ratings to be competitive against no-name opponents at an early stage of the race, Corbett gets almost exactly the same amount of the vote as he gets approval.

The potentially bad news for Democrats is they may not actually get to run against the incumbent. Corbett's approval rating among GOP primary voters is 43-45, down 25 points from an already weak 54-31 in January. And they would prefer someone else as their nominee by a 49-37 margin, more than flipped from Corbett's 45-37 edge last time.

“At this point Tom Corbett looks like the most endangered Governor in the country up for reelection next year,” said Dean Debnam, President of Public Policy Polling.

PPP surveyed 504 Pennsylvania voters, including an oversample of 373 usual Republican primary voters, from March 8th to 10th. The margin of error for the overall survey is +/- 4.4%, and +/-5.1% for the GOP portion. This poll was not paid for or authorized by any campaign or political organization. PPP surveys are conducted through automated telephone interviews.
