Close VA-Gov. election unless Warner returns

Raleigh, N.C. – With it being one of the most crucial states for Republicans this fall, both for their chances of retaking the presidency and the Senate, few real voters in Virginia have been putting much focus on next year's gubernatorial contest. Thus, there has been essentially no movement between the potential candidates in the three times PPP has polled on the race in the last four months. If Mark Warner chooses to abandon his Senate seat for another term in Richmond, the exceedingly popular former governor would be the overwhelming favorite. If he does not, it will likely be a close election, regardless of whether Republicans settle on the presumably more electable Lt. Gov. Bill Bolling or the more ideologically strident and outspoken A.G. Ken Cuccinelli.

In his first and perhaps final term, Warner is the 15th most popular out of 74 senators on which PPP has polled since the start of 2011. 50% approve and only 27% disapprove of his job performance. At this point, he would lead Bolling by 14 points (50-36) and Cuccinelli by 17 (53-36). That is essentially the same as in July, and down a smidge for Warner since April.

Cuccinelli runs three to five points worse than Bolling right now. While Bolling tops Terry McAuliffe by three (40-37), Cuccinelli fights the '09 Democratic primary runner-up to a 40-all tie. The disparity is worse against former Congressman Tom Perriello. Bolling tops him by three (39-36), but Cuccinelli is down two (39-41).

20-25% of voters are not sure who they favor in the non-Warner variations, a sign of low name identification for all the other candidates but Cuccinelli, of whom 64% have an opinion. Only 31-39% can say how they feel personally about the other three.

“Mark Warner could put this election away for Democrats,” said Dean Debnam, President of Public Policy Polling. “But most of the other possible candidates are so low-profile, and the political climate next fall so unknown, that it’s tough to say how things will shake out. But it will probably be a competitive election sans Warner.”

PPP surveyed 855 likely voters in Virginia from August 16th to 19th. The margin of error for the survey is +/-3.4%. This poll was not paid for or authorized by any campaign or political organization. PPP surveys are conducted through automated telephone interviews.
