Virginians support power sharing...sort of

Raleigh, N.C. – It may be a moot point with today's court ruling, but Virginians have contradictory feelings about whether there should be a power sharing arrangement in the deadlocked State Senate.

On one hand only 31% of voters think the Republicans should have full control of the chamber, while 55% think there should be some sort of power sharing arrangement. Predictably Republicans think they should have all the power and Democrats think it should be shared. Independents tip the balance by siding with the Democrats in support of power sharing by a 53/28 margin.

That's how Virginians generally feel about the issue...but when it comes specifically to whether they think Bill Bolling should be able to cast a tie breaking vote on Senate organization voters say yes by a 37-34 margin and independents side with the Republican point of view on the issue by a 41/37 spread.

Takeaway: in theory voters think there should be power sharing but they also think Bolling has the right to break the tie...so they're basically sending a message to the GOP that it should share power, even if it doesn't have to.

Bob McDonnell continues to have above average approval numbers in our Gubernatorial polling with 45% of voters approving of him to 33% who disapprove. In addition to most Republicans approving of him he has solid numbers with independents at 47/29 and receives crossover support from 19% of Democrats.

Despite his good numbers McDonnell as the VP choice would not be a game changer in the state. 30% say they'd actually be less likely to vote for the GOP ticket if McDonnell was on it compared to only 21% who would consider it a positive. That's not really a reflection on McDonnell himself so much as it is on the fact that there isn't really such a thing as a VP game changer.

PPP surveyed 600 Virginia voters from December 10th to 12th. The margin of error for the survey is +/-4.0%. This poll was not paid for or authorized by any campaign or political organization. PPP surveys are conducted through automated telephone interviews. PPP is a Democratic polling company, but polling expert Nate Silver of the New York Times found that its surveys in 2010 actually exhibited a slight bias toward Republican candidates.
