Romney holds small lead in Washington

Raleigh, N.C. – Momentum has swung strongly in Mitt Romney's direction among Washington Republicans over the last two weeks. He now leads in the state with 37% to 32% for Rick Santorum, 16% for Ron Paul, and 13% for Newt Gingrich. That represents a reversal from PPP's previous poll which found Santorum in the driver's seat with 38% to Romney's 27%. The large shift in Washington reflects what has happened in the race nationally over that period of time.

Two weeks ago Santorum's net favorability was 46 points better than Romney's in Washington. Now it's only 11 points better. Santorum's popularity has declined, going from +51 (69/18) to just +29 (60/31). Meanwhile Romney is on the up swing, going from only +5 (47/42) to +18 (55/37).

If Romney does end up winning Saturday night it will be a large Mormon vote that puts him over the top. We find that 14% of likely caucus goers are Mormons and 64% of them support Romney to 15% for Paul and 13% for Santorum. Romney actually trails Santorum 35-32 with non-Mormons.

In the places he's been successful Santorum has dominated the race with three core groups: Evangelicals, Tea Partiers, and those describing themselves as 'very conservative.' He's winning all those groups in Washington, but not by nearly the margin he needs to. He's only up 41-30 with Evangelicals, 41-34 with Tea Party identifiers, and 38-35 with those self labeling as 'very conservative.'

Among voters who say they will 'definitely' caucus on Saturday Romney's advantage is only 35-32. His overall advantage is larger because he's up 40-30 with those who will 'probably' caucus, but those folks may or may not end up showing.

“Mitt Romney has the momentum in Washington right now just as he does nationally,” said Dean Debnam, President of Public Policy Polling. “The big question in a low turnout caucus is whether his supporters are passionate enough to show up. If Santorum’s supporters care more they could still put him over the top.”

PPP surveyed 447 likely Republican caucus voters on February 29th and March 1st. The margin of error is +/-4.6%. This poll was not paid for or authorized by any campaign or political organization. PPP surveys are conducted through automated telephone interviews.
